I have an existing PostgreSQL database with tables that I'm not allowed to touch. However, I have access to a SQLite database file. Is it possible to transfer the data from the SQLite file to the PostgreSQL database? A: There are a couple of ways to do this: A) the easiest is to dump all the tables in the SQLite db, run that through psql and then re-import the tables from the psql dump. B) You can use the psql -d -U -h -p -w command to run PostgreSQL against a database remotely. You will need to have PostgreSQL installed on both the local machine and the remote machine that you run this on. C) You could use a tool like Etch if you want to make some GUI changes to the database. Or maybe even pgAdminIII to make manual changes. Q: Pessimistic lock in one to many relationship
